

PH, China conclude 'productive' 5th BCM meeting in Beijing

MANILA -- The Philippine and Chinese governments have agreed on Monday to address its disputes in the South China Sea (SCS) on a "positive and constructive attitude" as they both exchanged views on the general conditions on the ground in its fifth meeting for the Bilateral Consultation Mechanism on SCS (BCM).

"In a frank and friendly manner, both sides had exchanges on the general situation and issues of concern in the South China Sea and maritime issues between the Philippines and China. Both sides acknowledged the importance of addressing the differences in the South China Sea and reviewed progress on maritime cooperation in various fields," the Department of Foreign Affairs (DFA) said in a press statement on Tuesday.

"Both sides reaffirmed their commitment to properly address disputes in a positive and constructive attitude, and their commitment to continue to explore and undertake practical maritime cooperation initiatives, and by so doing, promote mutual trust and confidence," it added.

The Working Groups on Political Security, Fisheries Cooperation, and Marine Scientific Research and Marine Environmental Protection of the BCM were also convened.

During the meeting, Manila and Beijing had "considered to undertake mutually agreed practical maritime cooperation initiatives" including maritime search and rescue, maritime safety, and marine research or marine environment protection and fisheries cooperation in the South China Sea.

The meeting came a few months after President Rodrigo Duterte undertook an official visit to Beijing to meet Chinese President Xi Jinping.

According to the DFA, both governments during the BCM were encouraged by the "good momentum" in the two nations' relations highlighted by this recent meeting.

As they hailed the BCM as an effective venue to discuss the contentious SCS issue, the two sides also recognized the importance of other complementary bilateral and multilateral plat-

(COC)," the DFA said.

From its end, the agency sees the fifth BCM meeting as "productive".

The sixth meeting of the BCM is scheduled in the Philippines early in the first

PCOO chief cites NPC's crucial role in nat'l development

MANILA -- The National Press Club of the Philippines (NPC) has been recognized for its vital role in “promoting press freedom and cultivating empowered and accountable communicators.”

Presidential Communications Operations Office (PCOO) Secretary Martin Andanar extended his congratulations to the NPC during its 67th anniversary at the NPC building in Intramuros on Tuesday. “I commend the NPC for its significant contribution in ensuring a robust and trustworthy communication stance of the country,” Andanar said in his speech. “Through the years, the NPC continues to live by its peculiar function, described as a kind of public service that is crucial in national development,” he added.

Andanar cited NPC for providing a community for learning and social intercourse among journalists and media professionals. He said despite challenges, the NPC managed to rise to the occasion. “The challenges presented by the ever-changing communication landscape do not get any easier; but it is through organizations like you by which hope for a better future ignites in the hearts of every journalist and media professionals,” Andanar said.

“Anniversaries are reminders of the promises we made in the past and a great time to reflect on how we’ve grown and how far we’ve come,” he added.

The PCOO chief, meanwhile, urged the NPC to also use their anniversary as an opportunity to “ponder on” ways it can further improve in the changing media environment. (PNA)
